Pinoleum

Pinoleum blinds are traditionally used in conservatories and sunrooms. The system is composed of individual wooden reeds that are woven together to create visual texture and diffused lighting. A variety of colors are available. The shade system lets light in, while blocking the heat and reducing glare. Pinoleum blinds are available in manual or motorized operating systems. Shade systems can be used year-round and be adjusted to open and close with changing temperatures when attached to a control system.

Gravity Fed Shades

Gravity fed shades are typically used on sloped roofs and can also be implemented in window applications. Shades are mounted to the interior of the glass roof and are operated with a motor or manual pull chain moving in a Roman fold style. Shades are individually sized to fit between each section of rafter, with numerous materials and colors available.

Wide Span Horizontal

The wide span horizontal shade spans the eave line of a glass structure. The blinds are designed in a Roman fold style with various fabric, color, and texture options available. When extended, the shades trap heat in the ridge, allowing the living space to remain cooler. On cool winter days, the shades can be retracted to allow sunlight and solar heat gain into the structure.

Solar R

Solar R blinds are typically used to increase energy efficiency and control temperature inside a space. The smooth shades have an aluminum backing which reflects heat and prevents it from entering the room. When operated, the shades move on a roller system and pocket into a cassette via a string pulley system.

Pleated

Pleated shades are used in the roof and window walls of a glass structures. The pleats provide a visual pattern and soften daylight for interior spaces. Each shade is operated with an independent manual pull.
